The History Department offers several options to its undergraduate students. In addition to the regular major, students can choose a concentration in American, European, Global, or Policy history. In conjunction with the College of Human Services, Education and Public Policy, it offers a History Education program for those choosing careers as secondary school social studies teachers. Collaboration with the Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures has resulted in a major combining languages with the history of the regions in which those languages are spoken. Together with the Department of English, the History Department administers History/Journalism concentration. Concentration options are available for all majors. Honors Degree options are available for all majors and concentrations. The department also maintains an advisory program for prelaw students majoring in history. The department encourages interdepartmental or double majors that enable a student to develop competence in two areas, such as history and art history, or history and literature. A Degree with Distinction is also possible. An advisor in the History Department can provide details.
